Lucky or Unlucky at Lockett

So, run 1981 has come and gone, only 19 hashes left until we get to the big 2000. Put 3rd December in your diaries now.

Last week was run 1980, so let's start with a few memories. How many of you remember these the first time around?

Songs of 1980

Echo Beach - Martha & The Muffins (a hash favourite)

Love Will Tear Us Apart - Joy Division

Ace of Spades - Motorhead

Turning Japanese - The Vapors

Enola Gay - Orchestral Man Hoovers In The Dark

Films of 1980

The Blues Brothers

Raging Bull

The Long Good Friday

Star Wars - The Empire Strikes Back

'Twas a good hash last Monday, on a beautiful Cornish evening. Everyone managed to find the start without too much difficulty. OK, maybe one or two problems, but Naughty Boy and Omen did a sterling job in directing and parking everyone. The Sykes & Glanvilles were navigationally challenged, with Biff navigating and Scrotum

Factotum driving, but ignoring Biffs directions. Sounds like a fun night out.

The first part of the hash was a delightful woodland trot, which managed to combine some lovely tracks, some harsh undergrowth and one stream, which Footlose had to be carried across by Father Dogcatcher.

After a long climb up out of the woods and into the evening sun a group of back markers managed to find a nifty short cut, which upset Naughty Boy, but not the happy band of hashers (Biff, Dirty Oar, Uncle, Russ Abbot, Pearly, Bumless, Slap & Hurricane) They were even offered a free shower from the bloke washing his car.

Pimp and Glani managed to get themselves lost, temporarily. Just like predictive text, predictive hashing is not a good idea. At least they managed to short cut back to the bucket.

What is better is the Rule of Hashing #23, better known as Steve's Rule. This states that anyone called Steve can run through a check back, but still be on the right route. This works!!!!!! As evidenced last Monday, DoDo, Russ Abbot & Hairycane ran through several check backs, and managed not to get lost.

Rule of Hashing #43d: Any dog named Bumble chasing sticks will trip up Biff in a dramatic manner, much to the embarrassment of Bumbles owner, Dimwit.

The hash numbers were swollen greatly at the on down where all the Usual Suspects were eating, drinking and making merry.
