Wobbly reporting on Hash 2049, a delectable feast round about Two Bridges.

I found myself talking to Spike and Mudsucker last week at the White Hart in Bridestowe, talking, amongst other things, about the lack of willing scribes. Without realising I had succumbed to a cunning plan, for on checking the web before setting out tonight I found my name as scribe.

Not unwilling I gave the business a little thought and decided I was going to title this mag "The Dirty Dozen", and give us all characters from the aforementioned, but; and despite the inclement weather preceding things, we were actually 2 dozen, maybe even 2 baker's dozen for those old enough to know such things, and that's most of us. Pretty good in these chaste times and we were rewarded with a classic of diversionary tactics, tussocks and tremblers in the mire. It was not what was I expected, for Nipple Deep and Dildo Baggins had led us to believe it was rather short and we wouldn't find the way after an afternoon of rain, wind and then hail that had demanded a hasty retreat, so in fact it would be crap. Maybe they thought it would have washed away having used a watering can for each splodge. Tarts, or at least a tart for Dildo, care of Vampire Slayer and Hot Rocks.

The two of them were so pleased with themselves, so joined up together, that I mused on Deep Baggins but Nipple Dildo seems the appropriate moniker for the pair!

Onward! We were sent the wrong way and crossed the road, through the hotel car park then down the west bank of the West Dart, first tussock, flour splayed left and right, never unfindable, then we crossed the river and were bemired, found the odd quaker to worry a wobbly one, before a pointless loop (good hashing!) up and back towards Crockern Tor, then an even more Aimless and disorientating time somewhat around Crockern Tor but the other side of the wall, then a sprint back down the track to find Posh Pinny pleased to greet us. Mayhem was without dog but seemed to have his nose for the route, picking out the dust in the most unlikely of terrain. All in all it was quality stuff to hearten even the grinchiest of us, and it's not Xmas.

Hot Socks raced apace, skipping over the gnarliest of ground. Others found the tussock more difficult. Dirty 'Core Stability' Oar was posturally challenged twice over and even manged a grope of Fergie's behind. Fergie was so pleased she told everyone several times over but being politically correct has decided to model some zebra stripe leggings with a warning for the future.

Someone discovered her bush was unkempt so Can't Remember has been trimming and shaping hers, twisting and twirling (or was it twerking?), plucking and pinching. Hurricane found it so distracting and exhausting that afterwards he could only manage a weak but satisfied smile. Stand up again soon, Hurricane! The azalea will blossom again come spring.

Chopper and Raunchy are becoming surrogate Von Trapp's, whilst Pony is getting on hers and starting work in Swansea so sadly we will see her less.

I hope everything was solved at the Taproom on Saturday. I find beer usually helps. Here's hoping!
