Howdy folks, welcome to this weeks edition of the hash mag, crammed with useful information, helpful hints and of course all in the best possible taste.

Firstly we owe a debt of gratitude to Chopper who laid last weeks hash at the very last minute. The intended hare Penny Farting was unfortunately taken sick, (hopefully now fully recovered). It was gone 6pm before Chopper was called to action, yet he managed with the help of Embarista to ensure that in the true spirit of hashing triumph could be achieved from impending disaster.

The nominated scribe for the day was Posh Frock, who unfortunately has broken an arm, hopefully he will be fit enough to resume hashing shortly.

Your scribe master was alas not at the hash due to a pre arranged nautical excursion, thus rendering his observations of events as second-hand and somewhat brief in description.

However I am pleased to say that there is indeed an exciting forth coming event to announce. The Bikini and Mankini hash, (date and location to be announced). It was decided that hashers should be able get a foretaste of the apparel before purchase, so Windy has very sportingly agreed to model an outfit at next weeks hash. I am certain that all will agree that this will add a colourful new dimension to hashing!!

Footnote. Just under eight weeks till the nights start drawing in!!!!

Amongst the ladies there was no shortage of volunteers to model the latest fashions in hashing, indeed competition at times was verging on the unseemly. The eventual winner was Cheddar who will be sporting this cheeky little number at some future hash.

Both men's and ladies apparel will be available from the Hasherdabber shortly.

This week I include for your perusal and enjoyment two pictures taken at the Four Winds car park hash.

The image above without doubt deserves a worthy caption. Alas my creative talents are not up to the task so will leave it to the discretion of the reader.

The image below needs no introduction but shows a hasher of longstanding
