Poor Ernie sadly found himself struck down by the sick bug at the last minute, so I have stepped in to pen what I hope will be my last mag of my current term as Scribe Master (it is only my third this year so I can't complain really!).

We gathered at a rather wet Long Ash, to be met by the hares (Dildo Baggins and Naughty Boy – the mind boggles) who were looking very pleased with themselves. And as it turned out, their positive vibe was justified, as we were treated to a really enjoyable hash.

Predictably there were a few dissenters from this rose-tinted view. Glani felt that there was too much tarmac and not enough shiggy [I should point out that my amazing autocorrect changed shiggy to shaggy, I have learned not to trust such unintelligent tools]. Wobbly Knob mentioned that it was sad to see Slush shortcutting to try and keep up with the shorts! He also suggested that Grandpa was at the front because he shortcutted, which amused me no end as not 5 minutes later the said Grandpa, having described the hash and “an excellent but shitty run”, also accused Wobbly of shortcutting! I think they are both as guilty as each other of this disgraceful behaviour and should be disciplined.

Whilst setting the hash, Naughty Boy lost his dog for an hour, luckily the skilled hashers of TVH3 were better able to follow the trail and find their way home.

The ground was generally wet and muddy interspersed with boggy sections, as you would hope and expect. Cabin Boy described it as “too far down and too far up”. There was an invigoratingly icy river crossing, with a rope to ensure we were not swept away by the current. Poor Mincer, sorry I mean Arguilles, having got a bit lost early on, was late arriving at the crossing, by which time our efficient hares had removed the rope, leaving him to tackle the river unaided.

You can tell he had been lost by the state of his legs...

Scrotey contrived to lose his shoe not once, but twice! I arrived at a check at the same time as Grandpa – I shouted “CHECKING!”, and he shouted “STANDING AND WAITING”. So not just shortcutting but also cheek!!!

Back at the pub, Lost, on a rare outing with us bemoaned that of the 52 hashes in the year, he had picked such a tough one. I take this to be a backhanded compliment to the hares.

Biff stated that she was going to “thank [Krakov] properly” for “services rendered.”

Russ Abbot finally received his “500 runs” plaque, following his train whistle at the AGM. What a beaut!!

Hot Rocks and Vampire Slayer are having a brewery open day on 24 March from 4-9pm, to celebrate their new Rye beer, all welcome!

And finally, this is Glani.

On on!
